No one can say for sure when the first coastal watchtowers - Torri in Italian - were built along the shores of Italy's Ionian and Tyrrhenian coasts and on the islands of Sardegna and Sicily.

These watchtowers are situated in some of the most beautiful and spectacular places on the planet, and have survived attacks by man and nature for thousands of years.

Narrated by veteran tv and film actor Alex Cord, the film begins by visiting the history of the more ancient watchtowers, then focuses on the history of the Torres constructed by the so-called Saracens and the Normans who built them to guard against invasion from each other's armies, and also as a defense against marauding pirates roaming the Mediterranean Sea. Thousands of Torres were constructed, each one in view of the next.

The film takes the viewer over centuries of time through the eyes of the Vigili of the towers and the ferocious line of "Saracen Pirates." Re-enactments of the life of the Vigili in the Torres and pirate attacks are based on historical accounts. In fact, the re-enactment of the attack on the town of Ispani was shot in Ispani, which has changed little since the 1500's. Many of the local extras are decedents of survivors of pirate attacks. Locations with the most dramatic and beautiful surroundings and the most interesting Torre history are featured throughout the film.

What makes this film so exciting, is that the story of the Torres has never been told and is unknown to the world!
